SUMMARY REPORT

ADC-2006: MANAGEMENT OF CHILDREN WITH AUTISM SPECTRUM DISORDER

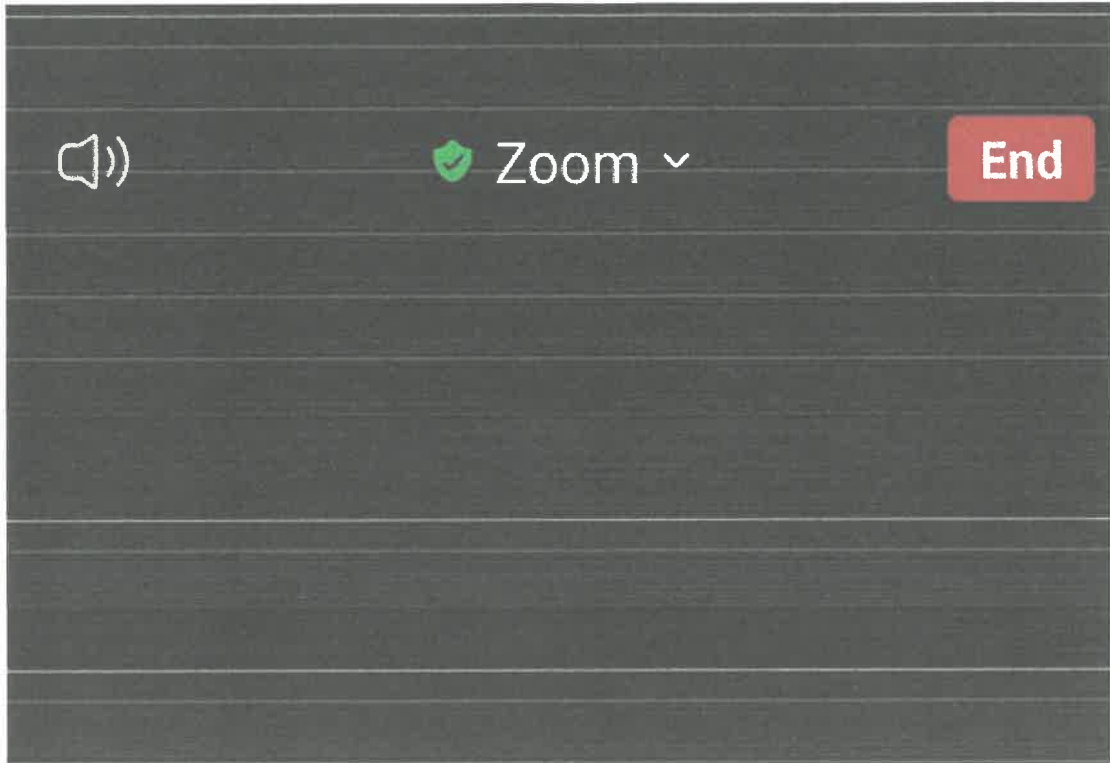

Early recognition of autism spectrum disorders plays an important role in management of these disorders. The goal is to give the child quality of life by minimizing the autism features and maximize the functional efficiency. Development and learning, socialization, reducing maladaptive behaviors, educating and supporting families are the key initiatives. The educational strategies, therapies are discussed. Optimization of health care is likely to have a positive effect on habilitative progress, functional outcome, and quality of life; therefore, important issues, such as management of associated medical problems, pharmacologic and non-pharmacologic intervention for challenging behaviors or coexisting mental health conditions, and use of complementary and alternative medical treatments, are also addressed. Dr. Shruta has many years of experience in teaching field & is also post graduate guide since 10 years. She has no. of publications both in National & International pubmed journals. She is specialized in management of children with disorders. The student is expected to develop an understanding of the wide spectrum of disorders affecting the child in early ages and learn to evaluate the clinical scenario with successful management of the same situation.

INTRODUCTION

- Autism is a lifelong disorder that has a great impact on the child or young person and their family or carers.
- When autism is diagnosed, families and carers and the child or young person themselves can experience a variety of emotions, shock and concern about the implications for the future.
