SUMMARY REPORT OF THE EVENT

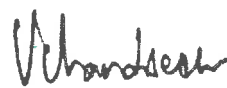

ADC-2004: CARCINOGENESIS AND MUTAGENESIS

Humans in recent years are subjected to various physical and chemical agents which are found to be damaging to the generations of DNA resulting in the process of carcinogenesis. Evolutionary processes gave rise to DNA repair tools that are efficient in repairing damaged DNA.

Damaged DNA replication may lead to gene mutations, which in turn may give rise to altered proteins. Many such events, broadly divided into the stages of initiation, promotion, and progression, which may occur over a long period of time can lead to the induction of human cancer. Understanding the causative factors and trying to eliminate them may help in reduction of these deadly alterations. Resource person: Dr. Bhavana Sujanamulk. She is renowned speaker for many National and International conferences. She has multiple publications to her credit. She has an extensive research work in cell biology. She has patents published for her won in this field

- Occasionally groups of ovoid cells with eccentric nuclei and abundant hyaline cytoplasm are seen- plasmaectoid cells.
- These plasmaectoid cells are modified myoepithelial cells
- Areas of squamous metaplasia and epithelial pearl formations may also be present.
